Join us for a dynamic day of investigation and discussion regarding the often confusing world of math education and how mathematics can (and should) be learned deeply by ALL students.

Workshop presenter Dan Hupp will facilitate an interactive, informative and enjoyable experience featuring:

- An in-depth look at the findings of the most credible research dedicated to achieving math proficiency for ALL students;
- An opportunity for participants to ask and have addressed their most pressing math-related questions;
- Strategies to ensure success for all students including approaches to eliminate all feelings of fear, apprehension, anxiety and out-right dread;
- Small group activities using the Think, Pair, Share structure;
- Ways to incorporate the tenets of balance, variety and differentiation as ways to reinvigorate math instruction and make learning math a student favorite;
- An on-line tour of the most effective free math materials of the day;
- Student materials that can be used immediately (as in tomorrow).

Please bring to this presentation a laptop AND your answer to this question: What do I need most to make my math program the very best it can be?

*On-site/in-person limited to 60 people
